7. Capacitation of the sperm:

- A. is caused by the zona pellucida
- B. occurs in the male
- C. prevents polyspermy
- D. is essential for fertilization
- E. removes the head of the sperm

D. is correct.

Capacitation involves removing the glycoprotein coat and seminal plasma proteins from the head of the sperm, exposing the acrosome and allowing the acrosome reaction to occur. Capacitation occurs within the female genital tract, and without its occurrence, fertilization could not occur.
